Domestic Violence

You have a right to be safe

National Domestic Violence Hotline Number: 1-800-799-SAFE (7233) or TTY 1-800-787-3224

Calling the National Hotline number will connect you to a referral for your local county program hotline.

Contact Your Local Domestic Violence Agency.

There are people in your community who can help. If you or someone you know is living with domestic violence, contact your local domestic violence agency listed in this brochure. Domestic violence agencies provide free shelter, counseling, legal services, safety planning, and other help. You can also contact your local legal services office to find out about your legal rights. Both domestic violence and legal service agencies provide services that are free and confidential.

Contact Your Local County Assistance Office (CAO).

While you are not required to report domestic violence, you may want to talk to your caseworker to get help. After talking to your caseworker, you may be excused from some program rules if following those rules puts you or your children in danger of domestic violence. Remember, any information you share with your caseworker about domestic violence is confidential. You must understand, however, that we are required by law to report child abuse to your local county Children and Youth Agency.

The following program rules may not apply to families living with domestic violence:

- Work
You may be temporarily excused from working, looking for work, going to school or attending job training if these activities put you or your child in danger of domestic violence.
- Child Support
You may be excused from some child support rules if giving information about the parent of your child or going to court for child support puts you and your family in danger. You also may be excused from identifying the parent of your child if your child was born because you were raped or abused.
- Teen Parents
If you are an unmarried parent under the age of 18, you may not be required to live with your parent or another adult, if living with that person is dangerous to you or your child.
- Time Limits
You may be excused from certain cash assistance time limits.

We understand that talking about domestic violence is very personal. If you want to tell us about abuse, ask to speak to your caseworker in private.

You can tell your caseworker about domestic violence at any time, even if you may find it difficult to talk about it now. It's important to get help. Even if you tell your caseworker about domestic violence at a later date, you may still be excused from certain program rules at that time.

PLEASE CALL 911 IF YOU ARE IN IMMEDIATE DANGER!

What is Domestic Violence?

Domestic violence occurs when someone in your household is harmed or threatened by another family member. The person doing the harm may be a partner, spouse, former spouse or anyone else you consider as part of your household. Domestic violence is hitting, hurting, threatening or making you afraid by following you or preventing you from moving around freely.

You and your family deserve to get free confidential help.
